Maryland at a Glance

For more than 30 years, Marylanders Against Poverty (MAP), formerly known as the Maryland Alliance for the Poor, has worked with many members of the General Assembly to create policies and programs that make things a little easier for families in our state that are struggling to make ends meet. Together, we have accomplished some great things!

In its early years, MAP would submit its own proposed budget driving the conversation about safety net funding in Maryland. We helped shape the conversation around welfare reform in the 1990s, which led to Maryland creating a more effective program than most other states. We have helped make Maryland's Earned Income Tax Credit one of the strongest in the country. We were instrumental in the creation of the Service Linked Housing program, Maryland Meals for Achievement, and the Maryland Medicaid Advisory Committee, among others. And, we have helped ensure that the state maintained funding for our safety net programs during economic downturns, a time when people need help the most.

Because our legislature has been willing to consider the needs of people experiencing poverty and take action to improve state policies, Maryland is better off than many other states. At the same time, we all know we have much more work to do as we fight the headwinds of federal policy changes and a rapidly changing economy.

The fact is, despite our best efforts, there are more people experiencing poverty now than there were 30 years ago. Today, nearly 200,000 more Marylanders are trying to get by on incomes below the Federal Poverty Level than in 1990 – a year that the U.S. economy entered a recession – and almost every county in the state has a higher poverty rate than it had in 1990. Alarming, almost half of all Marylanders living in poverty lived in deep poverty, defined as having incomes at or below 50 percent of the Federal Poverty Level, which means these households aren't struggling to meet their basic needs, but rather are struggling to determine which basic needs to forgo altogether.

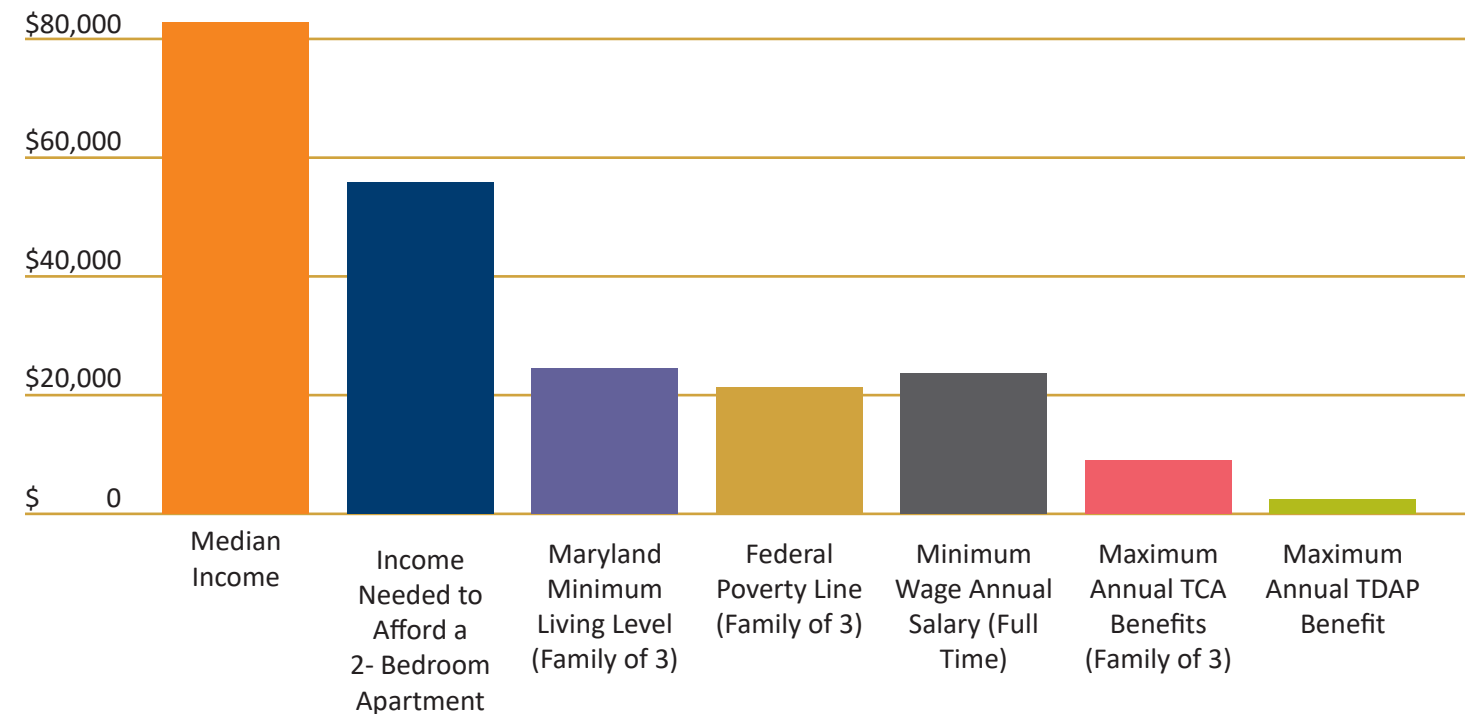

While unemployment rates have continued to decline since the Great Recession, wages often aren't high enough to support a family. While Maryland made great strides in passing a minimum wage increase during the 2019 legislative session, even with the new state minimum wage at $11 per hour as of January 2020, someone working full-time at minimum wage makes only 40 percent of the income needed to afford a two-bedroom apartment in Maryland.

As you will see in the following pages, many Marylanders also face additional hurdles because of their race, ethnicity, gender, or where they lived. Black and Latino Marylanders have a much higher poverty rate than the state as a whole, as do women. And some Maryland communities face higher concentrations of poverty than others.

MAP has compiled the Maryland Poverty Profiles since 1990 as a way to reflect the daily challenges of these hundreds of thousands of families in Maryland and each of its 24 local jurisdictions. The Poverty Profiles also show how many state programs – like cash assistance, housing assistance, nutrition assistance, and child care vouchers – are essential tools that help people meet their basic needs. While these programs aren't perfect - and often reach a fraction of the people who need them - the data show how important it is to maintain these services and build on their successes.

We hope this information will help inform the ongoing conversations about how we can ensure that everyone in our state is able to have a roof over their heads, sufficient food on the table, and the opportunity to thrive. Maryland has a history of supporting effective programs that help lift people out of poverty. MAP believes that, working together, our state can do even better. We strongly support efforts to address the state's many unmet needs and invest in the success of all Marylanders. As we enter a new decade, we believe Maryland can remain a national leader in providing vital support to those experiencing poverty.
